DAVID LEE HOLLAND

David Lee Holland is a second-generation designer, master jeweler and artist who grew up teaching other jewelers how to make truly fine jewelry at his family's internationally renowned school, The Holland School for Jewelers, in Selma, Alabama. Mr. Holland's father was one of the core early members of the Gemological Institute of America, and his mother was the first woman certified as a master watch maker in the United States.

Having grown up surrounded by the natural splendor of Alabama, David Lee Holland reinterprets nature's immense beauty in his ever-growing collection of botanically-inspired solid 18-karat gold jewelry.

The collection stems directly from nature – solid 18-karat gold sculptural interpretations of flowers, leaves, seeds, pods and branches are combined in timelessly elegant designs and fashioned into wearable works of art, sprinkled with natural color diamonds, lustrous South Sea and natural black Tahitian cultured pearls, and precious gems, testaments to the inspiring majesty of nature's delicate beauty as conceived and interpreted by David Lee Holland and Yannis Kyriazis, the two designers behind this growing brand.
