BIJOU FOR YOU

The fig leaves donned by Adam and Eve could be called the first fashion accessories of all time. Fast forward a few thousand years: The meadows of Eden are now the sidewalks of SoHo, and fig leaves have been replaced by hunks of metal and glitz. But, David Lee Holland, a second-generation jeweler who recently opened a shop in our asphalt garden, is bridging the gap between fashion trends of the then and now. His store's precept, "Designed by David Lee Holland/Inspired by Nature," encapsulates an impressive collection of botanically influenced jewelry. All made from solid 18kt gold, the pieces like the Coffee Bean bracelet (BELOW, $6,050) combine signature design and timeless motifs—acorns, eucalyptus, pine cones, and privet leaves—with naturally colored diamonds and pearls. Thanks to Holland, SoHo has become the spot where haute couture meets down-to-earth. David Lee Holland, 69 Sullivan Street, NYC, 212-925-1944.—SNOWDEN WRIGHT
